This is an author who appreciates relationships in the church, in family and in her circle of friends and co-workers. Her exemplary values are displayed in her writing. Whether writing for children, The Tycquet Twins, or writing for adults, Thursday's Secret, Judy pushes people to better themselves, to widen their perspective and to keep on despite obstacles.

Her books entertain, motive, inspire and offer hope for happiness.

Divorcee, Gayle Anderson (46) had no desire to remarry but dimpled Steve Carlson caught her attention when her church gave her the responsibility to organize activities for single adults over thirty. These activities also involved the "girls" power walk group, a group of five single women: enthusiastic, red-headed Maggie (31) always on the lookout for a fun, exciting time, usually with a man; eager-to-please Donna (27) with a tender heart and quiet persistence; mistrustful and aloof, no-nonsense Wanda (40); and single mother Ellen (32) struggling to raise her two daughters. Their personalities were as different as their looks and ages, but they shared a common bond of friendship.

In this first in a series of Tycquet Twins books, thirteen-year-old twins, Tylan and Trina, experience an adventurous summer exploring and working on their Aunt Madge's farm. As their parents work abroad, the twins discover joy in the hard work on their Aunt Madge's farm. They search for ways to be accepted by their peers, learn to believe in themselves and face new encounters and challenges.

...a great book for junior high and middle school readers with situations teens can relate to.
